Code of conduct

- Name of the group has been established by the group leader and it's Local Area Nerds (LAN).
- Members are supposed to attend the meetings, which will be strictly established before.
- Members are supposed to report any issues to other members of the Discord group.
- Members should agree to commit to every "sprint meeting" and take care to be there on time.
- Members should agree to communicate in a language that is suitable for everyone, for example, English, even if they are from different countries of origin.
- Members are supposed to be respectful and polite to each other.
- Members are supposed to take care of group work, make sure to not share any sensitive data, or code from the project with other students, that are not attending the group.
- Members should remember to use appropriate language during meetings.
- Members should be equally invested in the project.
- Members should understand each other's perspectives.
- Members are supposed to make sure that the project is free of any mistakes and goes in the right direction.
- Members should discuss any significant changes to the project during the meetings.
- The team should work on dividing the work on the project equally between members.
- Members should be aware that not attending a great amount of the established meetings and not respecting the rules can result in members of the group getting reported to the module tutor by the group leader.
- Group meetings are established at least once a week (Friday, 8pm), but additional meetings can be held at the weekend, if necessary.
- Attendance on every sprint is crucial. If a member of the group is not able to participate in a certain sprint, he must report it to the module tutor, as well as to other group members, and propose a fitting method of participating in a sprint with a group.
- Every group member agrees to contribute to the project. Each group member must have an impact on the group work.

Group members: Adam Zbikowski, Danny Newman, Max Ford, Tomasz Bernacki